

New Real Estate Law Firm Opens in Miami

Staff writer, Daily Business Review

June 3, 2016

Two former members of Greenberg Traurig's Miami real estate group office have formed Casareale & Partners to focus on transactions.

Anthony Casareale, a former Greenberg partner, and James Carenza, who was of counsel at Greenberg, opened the firm at 1000 Brickell Ave. and will represent institutional and individual clients on real estate transactions. Florence Harewood-Guerrier is a contract attorney at the firm.

"Jim and I are confident that applying our big law firm experience to our boutique setting will free us to focus on providing a deep level of client attention and results," Casareale said. "We are not hampered by conflict waivers, internal meetings and billing budgets. Our clients know that they are getting our attention and that we are not pushing the work to inexperienced attorneys."

The firm's fee structure also will offer significant savings, he said.

Carenza said the new firm is "in a unique position to provide out-of-state law firms with local counsel that their clients can trust and afford."

Casareale served as an adjunct professor at the University of Miami law school and was an advisory board member for National Association of Industrial and Office Properties.